

This election will not be about whether you are a Democrat, Republican or Independent, it will be about whether you will still have a contract protecting your wages, benefits, seniority, working conditions and the grievance procedure

GOVERNOR SHAPIRO

- Governor Shapiro concluded his speech at the PA Conference of Teamsters Annual Meeting by stating, "I will veto right-to-work if it's sent to my desk."
- Shapiro vows Pennsylvania will 'never be a right-to-work state' Fox News
- "This will never be a 'right-to-work' state," Shapiro told the audience, according to local outlet The Times Leader. "Never."
- As the former attorney general, he spent most of his term "protecting the union way of life."
- Shapiro said. "Anyone, anyone who wants to join a union should be able to join a union here in our commonwealth."

STACY GARRITY

- National Right-to-work group, ABC Keystone endorses Stacy Garrity in race against Josh Shapiro
- By accepting this endorsement, Stacy Garrity is signaling she's comfortable siding against labor in Pennsylvania.
- ABC Keystone backs right-to-work, which weakens unions, drains dues needed to enforce contracts, defend grievances, and protect pensions.
- They oppose the PRO Act, which would strengthen penalties for union-busting and protect workers from retaliation. This puts her at odds with the workers who keep Pennsylvania running — Teamsters, building trades, public-sector workers — all rely on strong collective bargaining.
- It aligns her with national anti-union networks pushing right-to-work and weaker labor protections. Workers see endorsements as values statements. These signals comfort with lower wages, weaker safety, and destabilized benefits.
